MISS BESS GANO

SPARKLING AND BRIGHT.

Sparkling and bright in liquid light, Does the wine our goblets gleam in,
With hue as red as rosy red,
Which a bee would choose to dream in.

Then fill tonight with hearts as light;
To lovers as gay and fleet,
As bubbles that swim on the breakers brim.

And break on the lips while meeting.
O, if mirth might arrest the flight Of time through life's dominions, We here awhile would now be glee.
The gray beard of his plonies;
To drink tonight with hearts as light
To lovers as gay and fleet,
As bubbles that swim on the breakers brim.

An break on the lips while meeting.
But since the delight can't tempt the wight;

Nor fond regret delay him Nor Love himself can hold the elf, Nor sober Friendship stay him, We'll drink tonight with hearts as light.

To lovers as gay and fleet,
As bubbles that swim on the breakers brim.

And break on the lips while meeting.

Effective January 1, United States Circuit courts are abolished and the work heretofore done by them will be merged with that of the Federal District courts. The Hepburn law of the last congress brings about the change.

Heretofore circuit courts have heard all civil business cases in bankruptcy, which were attended to by the district court along with the criminal business. Since the creation of the circuit court of appeals the district work has been attended to by the district judges, but acted as both district and circuit judges.
The only practical effect of the law is to abolish the circuit clerk's office.

A slender mother, standing in her garden-bed, from whom her little white offspring derives nutriment and moisture. And let not this be done excite an empty overation of reverence for life, the God, all-moving in the tree top and the human brain.
The love of animals, like maternal affection, has this advantage, that it is disinterested and claims no return, and can also at every moment find an object and an opportunity for its exercise.

Reverence for Life.

Only place all life before the child as with in the realm of humanity, and thus the greater reveals to him the less. Put life and soul into everything; describe to him even the lily, which he would pull up as an unorganized thing, as the daughter of
a slender mother, standing in her
garden-bed, from whom her little
white offspring derives nutriment and
moisture. And let not this be done
excite an empty overation of reverence for life, the God, all-moving in
